In the business world, just the word “consultants” can bring up mixed feelings. On one side of the spectrum are those business professionals that feel as if “consultants” are just another word for high-priced “experts” who bring little value to an organization.

On the other hand, there are business owners and professionals that feel a consultant is someone who can bring new solutions and ways of doing things that can create true value if implemented.

So, who’s correct? In short, both. In terms of management consulting specifically, it can be an excellent resource for a business, but only if you’re working with one of the best management consultant firms. For the most successful consultant engagements, it’s essential for businesses to have a clear idea of their goals and the role they want a consulting firm to take on as well as how they will measure success.

Key Factors Leading Us to Rank This as One of the Best Management Consulting Firms

When ranking and comparing management consulting firms, below are some reasons McKinsey was included on this list of the top 10 management consulting firms.

Values

When selecting from management consulting companies, it’s important to partner with top consulting firms that maintain a strong sense of ethical standards and values, especially since they will be charged with keeping so much of your business’s confidential information.

McKinsey takes its values very seriously, in an effort to build trusting client relationships over the long term.

In fact, 70% of McKinsey’s work is done for clients it has worked with for more than ten years, which the firm says is due to its ability to put client interests ahead of everything else.

Other values that are essential to McKinsey engagements include:

- Outlining the truth as the firm sees it
- McKinsey only takes on an engagement if it feels it will be able to create value for clients that’s well beyond its professional fees

Clients may also have access to turnaround executives through McKinsey Recovery and Transformation Services, which can alleviate the issues plaguing failing businesses.

Additionally, McKinsey has team members with expertise in 22 industries. In terms of specific business functions, McKinsey offers 12 functional groups, all of which aim to help clients improve their performance over a long-term trajectory.

Knowledge

One of the many ways McKinsey sets itself apart from other management consulting companies is through its dedication to knowledge.

It’s this investment into knowledge that allows McKinsey to provide not just professional guidance but to set it within the framework of the client’s industry.

This includes institutional context, dynamics of the particular sector of which the business is a part of, and also an understanding of the larger macroeconomic environment.

Every year, McKinsey invests $500 million in resources to the building of knowledge, insight, and capacity.

McKinsey is constantly looking at markets, trends, and emerging innovation and best practices, all of which are guided by not only specific industries but also regions and local influences. These insights are then used in client engagements.

Women Matter

McKinsey’s services are driven by industry expertise, but also focus on issues impacting the entire economy on a global level, at any given time.

One of its current focuses in entitled “Women Matter,” which highlights the importance of gender diversity for both businesses and the economy as a whole.

Oliver Wyman was founded in 1984, following the deregulation of the financial industry.
Oliver Wyman founders Alex Oliver, Chuck Bralver, and Bill Wyman felt it would be the ideal time to provide clarity and guidance to businesses in the midst of uncertainty.

Throughout the years, mergers and acquisitions have allowed Oliver Wyman to thrive and grow while maintaining a similar purpose and set of values.

These services are part of Oliver Wyman’s Sustainability Center. Through the Sustainability Center, Oliver Wyman consultants partner with clients to highlight sustainable business solutions across many industries.

Oliver Wyman can then offer strategies that achieve goals such as the most efficient use of resources, the implementation of clean energy and technology, and the ability to better meet the evolving needs of customers.

One of the service areas offered by PwC involves helping clients gain a comprehensive understanding of their customer. That understanding includes the underlying needs of the customer and the outcomes he or she is searching for.

Only then can the PwC management consultants help its clients move toward value propositions that are effective.

Cybersecurity & Privacy

One of the more unique aspects of the services available from PwC is focused on cybersecurity and privacy, which are constantly growing concerns for most, if not all, organizations around the world.

Rather than being a simple challenge to be tackled by IT, cybersecurity has become a critical component of business success and future growth.

PwC management consultants can work with clients to uncover the newest technologies and methodologies that will allow them to remain competitive and prepared for the current environment as well as the threats and challenges of the future.

Strategies are built on concepts of security but also on the availability of opportunities to grow and move forward.

This model aims to help clients of Strategy& unlock the performance levels they need while cutting costs and becoming stronger.

It's based on a proven end-to-end methodology. A company’s strategy is first assessed, and then the capabilities it needs to thrive are outlined.

Then, a strategic approach is created concerning cost management, with a focus on investing more in the good costs and redirecting spending from the “bad” investments.

The Boston Consulting Group Review

The Boston Consulting Group (BCG) is a global consulting firm that began in 1963 with the mission of helping organizations develop and cultivate a long-term competitive advantage.

BCG was founded by Bruce Henderson, and while the business has grown and evolved, central to everything it does is still a dedication to the original core values put in place more than 50 years ago.
BCG is now led by Rich Lesser, president & chief executive officer. All client engagements are guided by the desire to create value and insights that contribute to gaining a competitive advantage.

Key Factors That Led to Our Ranking of This as One of the Best Consulting Firms

Main reasons that BCG was included on this list of the top 10 management consulting firms are highlighted in the below list.

Smart Simplicity

One of the core components of the management consulting offered by BCG is called “Smart Simplicity,” which the firm defines as the “simple defense against increasing complexity.”

This approach was created with an eye toward the continuously growing complexity faced by businesses since the 1950s.

Businesses find they have to create new systems to address these complexities, leading to vertical layers, decision approvals, and more layers that can have performance ramifications.

The Smart Simplicity approach strives to address these complexities in a smarter and more streamlined way and to improve performance as a result.

Four Approaches

Another aspect of capabilities delivered by BCG centers on something called the Four Approaches to Business Model Innovation, which is yet another signature offering available to clients of this top 10 management consulting firm.

This approach answers questions such as how broad the scope of an effort should be and what the appropriate level of risk is.

The Four Approaches looks at these issues within the framework with the belief that not all innovation is the same, with the approach depending on the business and the objectives. These approaches include:

- The Reinventor: Designed as a response to fundamental industry challenge, such as a new regulation
- The Adapter: Aimed at addressing change without causing a disruption to core business

- The Maverick: Centered on startups and designed for businesses that are completely changing their industry

- The Adventurer: Seeks to expand the footprint of a business by moving into new areas

Experts

Everything BCG does as a top management consulting firm is driven forward by experts. Some of these key people that differentiate this management consulting firm include:

- Ashish Iyer: Senior Partner & Managing Director, Global Leader, Strategy Practice Mumbai. His focuses are on long-term strategy, growth, new market entry, and scenario planning.

- Martin Reeves: Senior Partner & Managing Director, New York. His focuses are in research and product development innovation, business model innovation, corporate responsibility, and social responsibility.

- Nicolas Kachaner: Senior Partner & Managing Director, Paris. He works on business model innovation, strategic planning, strategy co-sourcing and megatrends, business unit strategy.

- Amanda Brimmer: Partner & Managing Director, Chicago. Her areas of expertise include parts-and-services strategies, growth and business unit strategy, rotating machinery, and the oil and gas industry.

Broad Industry Specialization

To be competitive with other top management consulting firms, it’s vital for a firm to have industry specialization so it can bring a very specific level of expertise and contextual knowledge to each engagement.

BCG ranked well on this list of the best management consulting firms because of broad industry specialization.

Industries served by BCG include:

- Automotive
The business economy and environment are both increasingly complex, wrought with challenges, overwhelmed with competition, and, in short, difficult to navigate.

Many businesses find that it’s difficult to gain or regain their footing amidst the uncertainty, turmoil, and globalized marketplace, which is often when they turn to a management consulting firm.

The best management consulting firms are those companies that can bring to the table not just experience and an understanding of the macro and micro issues an organization faces, but they are also the firms that can become true problem-solvers.

Conclusion – Top Management Consulting Firms
Management consulting companies should be able to hone in on key insights and research, create plans and strategies, and then bring those to fruition in a way that’s sustainable and realistic.

A professional services company should employ a team of the very best business experts who can integrate experience, data, and holistic understanding to create long-term solutions and value.

These are high-level goals, but each of the names on this list of the top 10 management consulting firms is established and has a reputation for being able to achieve each of those objectives.
